Perry is an Associate in the Washington, DC, office, where he supports clients on matters involving intellectual property, trademark, and technology law. He has experience working across diverse practice areas, performing complex trademark analyses, portfolio management, conducting comprehensive legal research, drafting memos, and writing office action responses.

Perry has additional experience as a Research Assistant at Howard University School of Law, where he supported the intellectual property program and developed publications and CLE materials for attorney training. He was a Student Attorney in Howard's Intellectual Property, Patent, and Trademark Clinics, where he provided pro-bono representation to inventors and small businesses. He also served as a Legal Policy Intern at a non-profit public interest group, where he supported collaborations with lawmakers and federal agencies to develop policies.

Life Beyond the Law

Outside of work, Perry enjoys indulging in the arts; namely fashion, cinema, fine art and performance arts.
